THE HOUSE OF A HUNDRED
LIGHTS: A PSALM OF EXPE-RIENCE AFTER READING
A COUPLET OF BIDPAI

1

On the pond's face, the pelting rain made bubbles, and they broke again,
And reappeared and disappeared and, ah! I knew them — they were men.

2

The wise men say that life's not worth a barley-corn when all is done.
Well, then — and not till then — I'll try the granary behind the sun.

"Doubt everything," the Thinker said
when I was parch'd with Reason's drought.
Said he, "Trust me, I've probed these things;
have utter faith in me, — and doubt!"

4

“ Though the sky reel and Day dissolve, and though a myriad suns fade out,
One thing of Earth seems permanent and founded on Belief: ’tis — Doubt.

The world’s great rule is, “ Give and take ”;
and, so that Custom may not smother, I’ll give Doubt freely with one hand and take Faith freely by the other.

6

Yes, He that wove the skein of Stars and poured out all the seas that are Is Wheel and Spinner and the Flax, and Boat and Steersman and the Star.

7

What ! doubt the Master Workman’s hand because my fleshly ills increase ?
No ; for there still remains one chance that I am not His Masterpiece.

8

Out of all Epicurus' train

I wonder which class is sincerest :
The drones, or workers, who believe this doctrine of "Believe-The-Nearest."

9

Though man or angel judge my life and read it like an open scroll,
And weigh my heart, I have a judge more just than any — my own soul.

The Great Inn Keeper's table is the whole green face of Earth, and so I sit at meat with Him nor care whether the Guest be friend or foe.

11

The wise man said, "Beware of Love ; behold, its end is Ash and Rue !"
"Ho, ho," cried Youth, "this heart of mine is braver than I ever knew."

12

Last night I heard a wanton girl
 call softly down unto her lover,
Or call at least unto the shade of Cypress where she knew he'd hover.

13

Said she, "Come forth, my Perfect One;
 the old bugs sleep and take their ease:
We shall have honey overmuch without the buzzing of the bees."

14

Ah, Foolish Ones, I heard your vows and whispers underneath the tree.
Her father is more wakeful than she ever dreamed, for I — was he.

15

I saw them kissing in the shade and knew the sum of all my lore:
God gave them Youth, God gave them Love,
 and even God can give no more.

16

At first, she loved nought else but flowers, and then — she only loved the Rose,
 And then — herself alone, and then — she knew not what, but now — she knows.

Ah, Flattery, thou'rt like a comb with double face and double tongue,
 These women wear thee on their brows like an asp coiled where it stung.

The lies men tell I can see through — they hold no more than does a sieve :
 But women's lies hold like the sea,
 and like it surge and swell and live.

19

Hot Youth, to know Contented Love, must first bide Slander's rude caress,
 And learn to quench his Fire-of-Rage in Water-of-Babes-Gentleness.

20

The night passed and some youths caroused and some poor Fakir kept his fast :
 Some lovers kissed, some graves were dug,
 all the same night, and the night—passed.

I know not from the fading Rose with parted lips what whisper went.
 I only know the Nightingale
 Sang once again his old lament.

22

A nightingale once lost his voice from too much love, and he who flees From Thirst to Wine-of-his-Desire must not forget the last — the lees.

Night is a woman vaguely veiled and made to woo, I see her now :
 The newborn moon is suddenly her slender, golden, arched eyebrow.

24

I know a Thief who longs to steal from the moon's granary on high Or snatch the bunch of Pleiades from out the cornfield of the sky.

Desire's gold gates are always barred and open at no call or knock.
Age knows the only key is Pain,
but Youth still thinks to force the lock.

26

You invalids who cannot drink much wine or love, I say to you :
"Content yourselves with laughing at the antics of the fools who do."

27

Bad-Liver says each morning's sun is but to him a juggling bawd That opens up for man's deceit only another chest of fraud.

28

Old Ash-in-Blood still deals advice to Rose-of-Youth, and as he deals it, Rolls piously his eyes; but ah!
 he knows the pain whose body feels it.

29

“Now (to be brief),” the Preacher said,
 “each chose, himself, the path he’s wending;
 But has each thought upon the end?”
 And Youth said, “Is there then an ending?”

30

Five senses have been given us but while Youth pipes its roundelay They are five open doors through which both Love and Life may slip away.

31

Youth dreamed that Chaos swallowed Space,
 Time’s iron chain was snapped like rope,
 Eternity passed, and was gone,
 yet after all these things came — Hope.

32

But now where is that faggot-heap of hope wherewith my youth began ?
Fate was the flint and Time the steel that kindled every thought and plan.

33

In youth my head was hollow, like a gourd, not knowing good from ill ;
Now, though 't is long since then, I'm like a reed, — wind-shaken — hollow still.

34

The reader in Life's mighty book, in quest of Happiness, the bubble, Ne'er sees the Writing of Content without the heavy blot of Trouble.

35

The same small windows light all lives whether they be of rich or poor :
A sigh, a laugh, some wine, a sleep,
a tear, and then — the open door.

Yes, we do sleep and dream and laugh, and yes, we wake and work and sigh;
I simply mumble now, "We do";
the watchword of my youth was, "Why?"

37

Age lays its ear unto the lips of Mortal-Man's-Experience And only drinks the four faint words of Where and How and Why and Whence.

38

Tell Youth to play with Wine and Love and never bear away the scars!
I may as well tilt up the sky and yet try not to spill the stars.

39

Yet even for Youth's fevered blood there is a certain balm here in This maiden's mouth: O sweet disease!
and happy, happy medicine!

40

And maiden, should these bitter tears you shed be burdensome, know this:
There is a cure worth all the pain
— to-night — beneath the moon — a kiss.

41

Girl, when he gives you kisses twain, use one, and let the other stay ;
And hoard it, for moons die, red fades,
and you may need a kiss — some day.

42

One says, " Truth's false and false is true."
Well, since I've seen this maiden's eyes,
I'll be so false as to be true,
and such a fool as to be wise.

These three have never yet been bought or sold within the market place, — Good Luck or Love or Youth for gold of any of the populace.

44

Said one young foolish mouth with words as many as the desert sands, “ My grandfather took daily baths in rose water, just smell my hands ! ”

45

When priests give draughts of Duty's bowl and all streams that proceed from thence,
The old men do not drink with youths :
they drink Advice, the young — Offense.

46

Brothers, to-day Time set a feast, for this day Summer was begun ;
And by a priest called Equinox the Year was married to the Sun.

47

And now young poets will arise and burst Earth's fetters link by link,
And mount the Skies of Poesy,
and daub Time's helpless wings with ink !

48

In youth I wrote a song so great,
I thought that, like a flaring taper,
'T would shine abroad, — and so it did,
to the four corners of the — paper.

49

And poet, should you think your songs must or even will be read, Bethink thee, friend, what fine springs rise impotently from the sea's bed.

50

Fame sets the pace: the more you chase,
the more she'll turn and taunt and flee, Till you stand breathless at the goal and read its name, "Obscurity."

51

I did not hate that orator of many words for what he said:
I only thought it just some old quaint game his tongue played with his head.

52

I marveled at the speaker's tongue and marveled more as he unrolled it.
How strange a thing it was, and yet,
how much more strange if he could hold it !

53

A little Judge once said to me :
"Behold, my friend, I caused these laws!"
But I knew One who, strange to say, had been the Causer of this Cause.

54

And my conceited friend, be sure when you sleep, others will arouse ;
For the Great Landlord can't endure to have no tenants in His house.

55

Many a word caused many a tear between the rise and set of sun ;
Many a sound caused many a sigh
but Silence rarely caused a one.

56

The Tabor is the noisiest of instruments, but take the pest And crack his hide and peer within, you'll find his heart is hollowest.

57

Uhfus rehearsed before his goat, and practiced speech each day above it,
Until his fame spread far and wide,
and yet — the goat — knew nothing of it.

58

The villagers laugh at their fool, and roar and cough and shake and nurse
Their aching sides, then laugh again;
but he — laughs at the villagers.

59

This raindrop makes me dream brave dreams of how to overcome the sea:
The drop's far wiser head dreams too its dream, Impossibility.

60

When I'm in health and asked to choose between the This and That, alas!
I all too gladly yield my throne up there beside the Sea of Glass.

61

The Song of Love, the Song of Hate,
the Songs of Praise and of Thanksgiving;
I've learned them all, but there remains one called the Melody of Living.

A strong, brave man is born each month,
each year God gives a sage to men,
A poet each ten years, perhaps, but an unselfish person, — when?

63

Sometimes I think that all mankind exist but to be bought and sold:
The rich man's paramour is gold,
the poor man's goddess, gold, gold, gold.

64

Whatever Juice this sky will pour this gaping parched old throat will drain;
 What time the Harpær harps I'll dance:
 'tis He, not I, who shall compl'ain.

65

Meal may be scarce and cakes be burnt, yet I weep not nor even scold:
 The sun is food enough for me,
 't is large, and has not yet grown cold.

66

And yet, when eventide comes on I know that I'll be glad to take
 A little wine with snow. and yes
 (after the sun), a little cake.

67

Why! 'mongst all languages of earth there's none so sweet nor yet so fine
 As that one spoken daily thrice by two and thirty teeth of mine.

68

Yet what have I to do with sweets like Love, or Wine, or Fame's dear curse?
For I can do without all things except — except the universe.

69

The sieve-like cup of Earthly Joy still foams for me with many a bead,
But I have found another wine called Charity-without-a-Creed.

70

And if I want to sleep, I'll sleep more than Religion's laws allow.
We'll have a long sleep in the grave erelong; and should we not learn how?

71

Whether my days are cooled with calm or filled with fever's ardent taint,
I have the same blue sky as God,
I have the same God as the saint.

72

When strangers sit at meat with me, e'en though they be of rich condition,
And all their words be feasts, I'll take them with the little spice— Suspicion.

73

In all the undertakings I have entered in, my stratagem Has been to widen carefully some gap for getting out of them.

74

I answer to the riddle of “How many men on earth should be?”
“For friends, a billion are too few;
for enemies, — one surfeits me.”

75

I make no truce with cunning foes, beneath their sweetest words lurk thorns,
But with all fools I am at peace:
whoever saw an ass with horns?

76

Though all I was seems but a dream,
and all I am, not worth a sigh,
If all that I possess is — friends,
well, all I wish is — not to die.

77

I give God praise because of right, and fear, for terrors that He sends ;
But more than all, I give Him love because He gave to me — my friends.

78

When I get wounds from enemies
I try not to lament a bit :
The tree that bears not any fruit,
who ever threw a stone at it ?

79

When Fortune sits at meat with me and lights my fire and tolls my bell, Be very sure I'll soon collect all scattered Means-of-doing-Well.

80

Ye wily ones think not to thwart what warrant Destiny hath signed ;
For just before he strikes, he makes the cunningest both deaf and blind.

81

But work a year and sleep an hour, and sleep a night and sing a day,
And take a little wine and love,
 and when you feel religious — pray.

82

So far, alas, the desert bears the Caravan of the Wise and Just,
The wind brings to these foolish ones no sound of it, nor scent, nor dust.

83

For some are beasts and some are men in these new days as in the olden,
For neither now nor evermore will gold be clay or clay be golden.

84

Think not such sterile leaves of chaff have ever yet escaped the flail,
For on Fate's dreadful threshing floor
Contrivance is of no avail.

85

Sea fathoms deep midst gold and gems
Life sits and weeps on ocean's floor,
But though on land no treasure is,
Life laughs and stands — I'll stay on shore.

86

I envied the brown diver when he brought the pearl to where I read,
But envy had not known my heart
when the green waves closed o'er his head.

87

E'en though I be but thorns and dust the Gard'ner gives me as He goes Such rains and suns, I give Him blooms, yes — perchance — even — a Rose.

88

Whether I be a blossom for the Gardener's nostrils I care not ; Mayhap I'll be the stick of wood that feeds the fire to boil His pot.

89

Now Patience is the hurtfullest of all the thorns my Garden wears,
And yet the sweetest of them all is the white bud that Patience bears.

90

This mess of cracked ice, stones and bread of sweetness savours not a bit,
And yet my friends, I'm satisfied, for lo ! I — I — invented it !

91

When my desire has set itself upon a thing and strives to win it,
And Wisdom's method's will not gain,
I use a little Folly in it.

92

Now all ye slothful ones, who fear
Death's nearing goal, take heart of grace:
Who never went upon the road will never reach the halting place.

93

Let me once see my Spring of Hope clad in her clinging, light green dress, Then I, for one, will aye endure
my yellow Autumns of Distress.

94

Now who will undertake to tie this broken strand of yellow hair?
Ah! Is it tied, and strong? But friend, forget not this,—the knot is there.

95

Sometimes I think man's fate is like a weather vane with circling base
That points now north, now south, now turns, blown by the winds of Time and Space.

96

The Great Sword Bearer only knows just when He'll wound my heart, not I:
 But since He is the one who gives the balm, what does it signify?

97

If my Control should lose its hold on Fortune's collar through some hurt, What then? — Why then I'd simply cling to old grey Resignation's skirt.

98

Of all the languages of earth in which the human kind confer
 The Master Speaker is the Tear:
 it is the Great Interpreter.

99

Man's life is like a tide that weaves
 the sea within its daily web.
 It rises, surges, swells and grows,
 — a pause — then comes the evening ebb.

In this rough field of earthly life
I have reaped cause for tears enough, Yet after all, I think I've gleaned my modicum of Laughing-Stuff.
